“ The first time I had a lesson with Jerome I learned that I didn't hold the shotgun correctly, my stance was wrong and I didn't pull the trigger right. Other than that, all else was just OK but as he said, "we'll work with what we've got and maybe get somewhere". And we did, eventually. But the best part about hanging around Oil Capital was getting to know a great group of friends and sportsmen who gathered to see if they could master the targets that Jerome and Harvey created to test everybody. And I learned soon enough that under that gruff demeanor was a sympathetic professional who just wanted to help everybody enjoy the sport and, just maybe, improve their game. God bless you, Jerome.
