“ I met Ken when I was only a pre-teen in the mid 1970s. He was later to marry my older sister. He played brass instruments in High School (the Mellophone was one). I was just beginning to play the clarinet at the age of 11. He took an interest in me and let me borrow his instrument simply because I was curious about it. Later, after being married to my sister for over a decade, as they were expecting their second son to be born, he asked me if he could name his boy after me (David). He told me that he felt I was the only one of his first wife's family who had accepted him with open arms way back in the 1970s. This gesture was was one of the most beautiful moments of my life. I always enjoyed having long discussions with him, on the few occasions during the last 40 years when we communicated. Rest In Peace, Ken. I know you were suffering with some serious physical maladies for some time.
