“ I was not that close to Tiffany. I worked second shift, she worked third shift, but her death hit me with an unexpected impact. She always struck me as a smart, cheerful , upbeat person. She was one of the few, like me, that was willing to take things apart and try to fix them. I think of her as a young girl, but she was over 40. To me, that is still young. I didn't consciously think about it at the time, but maybe one of the reasons that it hit I me so hard was... maybe I was subconsciously thinking... that could have been my daughter. In some way, it might be considered a blessing that her parents were also killed. if someone killed my daughter, I would probably not want to live on with that much pain. At best, she was a medical professional who probably saved a good many lives by just doing her job, as I continue to do two days a week in semi- retirement. Which brings another round of pain. I wish she could have reaped the benefits of a long and successful career, as I have. she should have had the joy of relaxing with family and friends. I can only hope that her spirit lives on and is experiencing greater joy than she ever knew in this world. And to those of you left behind, like me and many others in the lab, I wish you peace and comfort. The pain will never go away, but God will give us strength to bear it.
